

MYTHS AND MISCONCEPTIONS ABOUT SNAKES

Snakes are not evil, but are an important part of natural ecosystems and control rodent populations.

Not all snakes are dangerous to humans

Every green snake is not a deadly green mamba

Every black snake is not a deadly black mamba (which are not even black)

Snakes do not chase people

Snakes are not "cold blooded"

Snakes cannot sting with tail

There are no snakes with a head at each end of the body

Young snakes are not more dangerous than adults

Milk does not attract snakes

A snake will not resurrect if you have not smashed or cut off its head

Holding your wrists when you see a snake will not keep the snake from moving until help arrives.

A snake in your house, or a snake bite, does not mean you are cursed

Oil, burning tires, and other chemicals do not repel snakes but do harm the environment.

Traditional remedies cannot remove venom from your body or render it ineffective